

My Top 5 Drag/Stage Make-up Must Haves

Black eyeshadow. The two I go between are M.A.C. Carbon (left) and M.A.C Black Tied (right)

How I use them:

These blacks are THE BOMB. Not only are they the main base color in my drag eye make-up, but they also double as my eyebrow color filler and eyeliner smudger for my “real” girl make-up, read non-drag 😊.

Lashes (top and bottom) I make my own.

How I use them:

This is a no brainer. The longer the lashes the closer to goddess you are. I LOVE lashes and have totally made them my bitch. It's been a drag dream of mine to have my own draglash line and I'm getting pretty close to making that a reality! YEA!

I have sets of lashes for EVERY occasion!

Bronzer = Contour. M.A.C Refined Deeper Bronze

How I use it:

This "technically" is not a contour color, but part of the magic of make-up is breaking the product's "intended for" use and using it the way you want to. This "bronzer" is the base of both my drag + real girl contours. It's light enough to blend in with my cheekbones for my real girl look, but dark enough to lay a solid base for my darker drag contour. I use this to paint under my cheek bones, temples (right above my eyebrows), chin, and nose.

Another FABO double duty product!!

Ben Nye Banana Powder (pictured left, my applicator + travel highlight case)

How I use it:

This is my base highlight for my drag mug. After my primer + foundation, I highlight my face to allow it to cook while I'm beating the rest of my mug. CAKE IT ON. I highlight above my cheekbones, bridge of my nose, my forehead area, and underneath my eyes. The highlight underneath your eyes serves double duty as your highlight AND to catch any eyeshadow color flakes that fall on your cheeks. After you've finished with your eyes, swipe any excess shadow residue that has fallen onto your highlight powder with a big blending brush.

Voila! No more multi-colored eyeshadow streaks on your flawless foundation!!!!

Primer(s) Smashbox Photo Finish for face & Urban Decay primer for eyelids.

How I use them:

You're only as good as your foundation and these products are a MUST in my drag make-up routine. After washing my mug, I put both of these bad boys on. Why prime? Because it lays a clean monochromatic base that allows each color and pigment you put on look as true to color on your face as it does in your make-up palette!

Want more make-up inspiration? Check out this handy list of my favorite cruelty free make-up products that are not only stage worthy, but are just so freaken' awesome you'll want live in them!